Synopsis:

"THESE DAYS" is a compelling docudrama that delves into the life of Jay, a young artist whose unwavering spirit shines through adversity. Living in a tough Salvadoran neighborhood and being raised by a strict single mother, Jay relies on wit and street smarts to survive. Amidst the challenges, he finds solace and strength in creating murals that serve as a testament to his resilience, guiding him through the summer and beyond.

An Ensemble Cast of Exceptional Talent:

This captivating docudrama boasts an ensemble cast of Salvadoran and Central American actors, including Carla Vila from Los Angeles, Robert Ascencio from New Jersey, and renowned Salvadoran influencers such as Hoozay, Tia Maria, and Jario Flores. Alongside these seasoned performers, the film introduces an array of remarkable first-time actors like Billy Mayorga Reyes, Kelly Reyes, Amy Ochoa, Bryan Vallardes, Jose Jiminez, and Jhonny Ponce.

A Heartfelt Slice of Life:

"THESE DAYS" offers viewers a poignant and heartwarming glimpse into the Salvadoran neighborhood of Brentwood, Long Island, New York. It is a coming-of-age docudrama that captures the essence of family, resilience, and the pursuit of dreams. Through laughter, tears, and unforgettable moments, "These Days" paints a vivid portrait of the American Latino Experience, reflecting the rich tapestry of Central American stories that deserve recognition in the film industry.
